Arthur Adams, who has been selling vanity cases in the poorer neighborhoods without his father's knowledge, is making up his invitation list for a party, which includes all the elite of the town. He lays it next to his list of customers and his parents send invitations to all. Arthur discovers the error and goes in a taxi to stall off the Clanceys and Smiths, but they all pile into the taxi and he is overcome.

As soon as they arrive at the house they all make a dive for the sandwiches and generally make themselves unwelcome. Arthur and his chum Eddie decide to fake a fight and get the Clancy crowd to follow them outside, after which they plan to sneak back in and lock them all out. They exchange punches and the Clanceys don't wait for them to go outside but assume that the fight is a hospitable affair that they can all get in. So they start a battle royal, the men breaking furniture and the ladies pulling hair.

When the house is cleared, Arthur rises from the wreckage. Afraid to face his father, he punches himself in the jaw and falls to the floor unconscious.
